input: The data to be converted. output: The converted data. Task - Transform data. Note: Microsoft Excel 97/2000 can perform functions on a worksheet as long as it is not a named range. See "Managing Named Ranges" on the "Special tab" of the "Data" group on the ribbon. Use these steps to select a range in an Excel workbook or an XLSM file. Title of table. 2-5. Modify the Named Range. For an image of the Excel cell editor, see Table 1. Click in the first cell, click in another cell, and press Shift+Enter to go to the cell. To convert the name of a range, select a cell or range of cells, and then click the Home tab. Move to the top row of cells you want to convert. Select cells to convert and then click the Transpose button. If you want to convert multiple cells, just select the cells and click the Transpose button. Select a range of cells. See "Managing Named Ranges" on the "Special tab" of the "Data" group on the ribbon. Select the cells to convert. For example, if the target cell range is A1:C4, select the A1:C4 cells by clicking the first cell in the target range, then the second cell, and so on. If you want to convert cells A2, A3, and A4, select the cells by clicking the first cell of A2, the second cell of A3, and the third cell of A4. Then select A2, A3, and A4 and click the Transpose button. Notice that the named range has been converted to a new named range, and the range has been moved to the first row of the destination range. To view the new named range, select a cell in the destination range, such as A1, and click the Home tab. In the "Group" drop-down list, select "Work with" and then select the new named range. Click Edit. If you want to convert a range of cells to multiple named ranges, select the cells and then select Edit Name. From the "Group" drop-down list, select "Work with" and then select the desired named range. Click Edit. You can also use the Manage Names button on the "Data" group on the ribbon.
